WHY ATTEND METF26?

METF26 will look at the decarbonisation 'learning curve' to date and discuss what is going well and where industry and policymakers could do better. Industry experts will also discuss how multi-stakeholder collaboration on projects is working in practice, with reference to cross-border pilot initiatives and green shipping corridors, and consider whether the decarbonisation roadmap needs some readjustment or refinement in order to keep on track with GHG reduction timelines.

Do some current approaches to decarbonisation need to be set aside as unworkable? Should we expect and accept industry consolidation as new technologies mature and gain commercial traction? And do business and leadership strategies need to change in order to deliver and sustain the energy transition effectively?

METF25 BY THE NUMBERS

The sold-out Marine Energy Transition Forum 2025 brought together industry leaders during London International Shipping Week to tackle one of shipping's biggest challenges: making the business case for decarbonisation.

Through a series of expert presentations and panel discussions, delegates explored the true cost of the energy transition, the impact of FuelEU Maritime and emissions regulations, funding and de-risking mechanisms, and the barriers preventing projects from reaching final investment decisions.

Featuring speakers from organisations including IMO, STX Group, Gasum, Lloyd's Register and Enova SF, METF25 delivered a focused examination of how maritime businesses can move beyond pilot projects and turn energy transition ambitions into commercially viable realities.
